WHO THEY ARE

Some Bits of Information Regarding the Carlists.

THEY'RE BACKED BY CLERGY.

During the present war many persons have wondered what the Carlist movement in Spain represents and who are behind it.

The following information is given that LEDGER readers may fully understand the terms.

At the death of King Ferdinand of Spain in 1833, his three-year-old daughter, Isabella II., succeeded to the throne, though Carlos, Ferdinand's brother, claimed to be entitled to the honor under the salic law which provided that no female should go to the throne as long as any male descendant of the King was living.

This law, however, had been revoked by Ferdinand, who had no children at the time, but six months after his death a daughter was born and she became Queen to the exclusion of Carlos.

The latter's descendants, who are called Carlists, have since persistently insisted that by right of succession the throne belongs to them, and for over fifty years Spain has been subject to Carlist uprisings which have simply meant a number of unsuccessful wars, the destruction of property and general public unrest. The Carlists have found their strength in what are called the Basque provinces, dominated mostly by the clergy, who believe in the divine right of Kings and of Kings' succession.

A strong sentiment in favor of a Republic exists in the cities, where people have been led to independent views by education, reading and travel. It is unnecessary to say that between what are called the Republicans and the Carlists there is a strong antipathy, for their aims are radically different.

In 1873 Spain was a Republic, and the people owe to that brief period of popular Government many of the liberties which they now enjoy.
